

MICHAEL D. GORDON has been lecturing in criminology and criminal justice in the Department of Sociology, Psychology and Social Work at the University of the West Indies, Mona, for the past 15 years. He also lectures courses in juvenile delinquency at the University of Technology. He has a Masters degree in Applied Social Psychology from the University of the West Indies, Mona, and is currently pursuing a doctoral degree, researching the psychological impact of restorative justice on victims of harm. He is a National Intervention Team trained member of the Jamaica Red Cross and a Restorative Justice Facilitator.